About the programme

This short-term online program is situated at the intersection of Literary Studies and the UN's Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). With their now-seemingly impossible deadline of 2030 for fulfillment, the UN SDGs have figured, informed and been anticipated in literary texts across cultures. Literature, like the SDGs themselves, enables the making and remaking of social imaginaries towards a juster, fairer and cleaner planet. The program foregrounds 'precarity' as a particular approach to the SDGs, where domains such as gender equality or climate action have been represented in literature as being in crisis but also, in literary texts as sites of embattled states of being, revisionism and reimagining. The STP will demonstrate how Literature at large can be read for and via the SDGs.
